

Dependability in today's market

Wabtec has a long legacy in rail thanks to our ability to reliably deliver for the customer on time with high quality. We're still committed to showing dependability in the way we always have, but one of the demands of the industry today is to deliver a wider array of technologies to meet our customer's changing needs.

Since Wabtec bought GE Transportation, we've been able to show up for our customers with more of the products they need — and that's good for everybody.

Product mix in Erie

With a product mix that's twice as diverse as the start of the CBA, we're able to work with multiple volume streams, bringing more work to Erie.

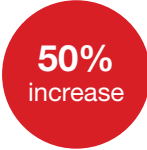

Dependability is a two-way street

When customers are able to depend on us for different types of work, we're able to more consistently bring in new orders. That means more work at the facility and more stable jobs for employees.

Flexible and reliable workflow

In the past, when a smaller number of customers came to us for just two types of products, we were more vulnerable to disruptions from their business. With more customers and a wider range of products, our streams of work can be resilient in the face of market changes.

Flexibility makes us dependable

To keep delivering for our customers, we need to keep adapting to their needs with new products and new skills so we can continue to bring in new orders.

Erie's partnership with Wabtec is great for employees and the greater community.
